Legal concerns force Clay to to rescind vote on tax earmarks

by Lee Weyhrich

Staff Writer

When Clay City Council voted in their last meeting to take the earmarks off a five-mill property tax, the vote was not done legally, according to state law.

Councilman Ricky Baker cited Alabama Code 11-45-2(b) which states "No ordinance or resolution intended to be of permanent operation shall be on as written in its entirety. adopted by the council at the same meeting at which it is introduced, unless unanimous consent of those present is given for the immediate consideration of such ordinance or resolution...". Baker also cited the League of Municipalities handbook which states that an ordinance of this nature may only be changed by means of another ordinance, and that the ordinance must be voted

Since the earmark change was introduced during mayor and council comments as a motion, was not read as a whole, and was not voted on during unanimous consent, the change did not actually pass into law.

"It needs to be rescinded tonight, a new one needs to be written, read at the next meeting and either placed under unanimous consent at the next meeting and voted on at the following meeting," Baker said.

The council voted unanimously to rescind the previous motion in order to straighten out the error.

Councilman Bo Johnson stated his goal in attempting to remove the earmarks was to keep the money from being untouchable in the event a police force or school system was not feasible. He still hoped much of that meeting, or read at the next funding would go to improving schools and public safety.

> At least one Clay resident expressed his wish that the earmarks stay in place.

"I'm here to register my position in regard to your recent action which removed the schools and police force as earmarks that were attached to the recently passed 5-mill ad

The Trussville City Library enjoyed another successful summer reading program this summer, and that's something for which readers can be proud. The annual program brought in more than 1,100 children from ages birth to 5th grade this year, and added a little more than 500 teens and adults as well.

Children's Librarian Becky Burchfield said she was very excited, along with the children to have such a successful program.

The summer reading program offers anyone of any age the chance to track their reading by filling out log books and receiving rewards for meeting reading

Road work on Chalkville Road between Poplar Street and Green Drive is almost complete, and work will begin on Poplar Street soon.

by Chris Yow

Editor

The City of Trussville has taken several steps to improve roads throughout the city lately. Current projects include minor finishing touches to Chalkville Road, including striping and raised pavement markers, but those projects won't be completed until Poplar Street is complete as well according to Wayne Sullivan, director of the street department.

Sullivan said the traffic on Poplar Street will likely be down to one lane at a time as the project moves along. The city plans to begin on Poplar Street as soon as the weather permits. Until that time, traffic lights in the area will remain on timers.

Mary Taylor Road is open once again, nd drivers can expect the road to remain open and construction free until Magnolia Elementary gets closer to opening.

The city also recently passed a resolution to allow the Alabama Department of Transportation to resurface the area of Interstate 59 from Chalkville Road to Edwards Lake Road.

ALDOT is also in the pre-construction phase of adding a lane to the I-459 and U.S. 11 ramp according to Jefferson County Public Information deputy Linda Crockett. Construction on that should begin within the week she said.

Local authors release pair of books

Trussville residents Pat and Karen Schlatzline have been ministering across the globe for almost 20 years, and Pat has written a total of three books helping others and ministering to many who may not have any background in churches or the Bible. Karen has just written her first book, set for release in September.

Pat recently released his latest work "Unqualified" on June 2, and the website for the book gives a little background into what readers can expect from the

The website states on its homepage, "Maybe you have a tainted past. You let yourself get pulled into promiscuity, drugs, sabotage, or theft. Maybe you've never had any of these major struggles, but you still battle insecurity. You can't imagine God would ever use you! You're completely unqualified. But the truth is God wants to use you exactly where you are because you are unqualified."

Pat stated he wrote the book to minister not only to Christians who feel unworthy of being used by God, but even to unbelievers who feel like all hope is lost.

"This book is about the fear of feeling unqualified," Pat said. "It's for anyone who has ever felt like they were not good enough for God to use.

Joint project could help Floyd Bradford Road be paved

The Birmingham City Council plans to vote this week on a joint services agreement allowing Mayor William Bell and the city of Birmingham to work with the cities of Irondale, Leeds and Trussville according to Bryan Davis of the Birmingham Business Journal.

Davis reports the project, a road surface improvement project of Floyd Bradford Road, will cost a total close to $1 million, and that cost will be divided among the municipalities. Jefferson County is slated to pay the bulk of the cost with a $649,452 commitment.

Trussville would pay $174,860 in the current agreement. Trussville Mayor Gene Melton said that number could decrease depending on private support.

Trussville woman guilty of conspiracy to defraud

From staff reports

A former employee of Serra Nissan was convicted of conspiracy to commit fraud by a federal jury last week. Kimberly H. Branch, 34, of Trussville, was convicted after three days of testimony. Branch was acquitted of 15 counts of wire fraud. No sentencing date has been set, and

"Whether it is consumer or corporate victims, my office takes fraud very seriously and will continue to prosecute those who deceive and cheat other," U.S. Attorney Joyce White Vance said in a release.

Court testimony showed others, Branch, among falsified sales reports

Branch remains free on submitted by wire to Nissan between March 2013 and April 2013 according to the press release. Serra Nissan then received sales incentive payments it did

> The sales reports showed 15 specific vehicles were sold at the Birmingham dealership, but were actually sold at Serra Visser Nissan in Cullman.

The process is sometimes incentives pay equaled called "pooling sales" and occurs when a dealer who owns or is associated with more than one dealership combines or attributes sales from one dealership to another in order to meet sales incentives levels that each dealership would not reach on its own the release

The total

Randy Visser, general manager of Serra Nissan, entered a guilty plea in July to conspiracy to defraud Nissan North America through incentive programs. Visser admitted he directed employees of unearned the Birmingham dealership to failfy reports in order to pool sales from the Cullman dealership. He is set to be sentenced Nov. 17.

Eight other Serra Nissan managers or salesmen pleaded guilty this year in a separate conspiracy to boost loan approvals and car sales by creating and submitting falsified loan documents to lenders.

"Having a set goal really encourages kids to read and meet those goals," Burchfield said. "The kids definitely don't want to be the ones who don't get their reward, so they meet those goals."

The Trussville area has a very active readership at all ages, according to Burchfield. After working in other Jefferson County libraries, she said the Trussville kids are proud of their accomplishments and get a little more excited about reading than other places.

"These kids really enjoy reading. They have a great time with the activities, and we're proud for them," she said.

Real Estate: McMansion vs. Tiny House...

hile for decades thought "bigger better" has ruled, it looks like the tide may well be turning in the real estate industry. This change in trend is being brought about by two very different groups: Baby Boomers and Millennials. The Tiny House Movement has caught the imagination of these two outwardly dissimilar groups due to many shared realities as well as shared dreams or desires.

Simplicity... As a rising number become aware of the complicated lives brought on by burdensome debt, both groups seem to be leaning toward a more simple existence led largely by the desire to be less encumbered with debt. Simplicity, however, for both groups also includes a desire for peace of mind, as well as eliminating or reducing both the fiscal and emotional costs of following the aspirations of others.

Mobility... Another strong motivator for both groups seems to be mobility or the ability to see more of the world or to take advantage of developing opportunities for either career or life experience. The large expensive home

Alabama home to many great companies

ast week discussed the legendary story of Aflac. Three more remarkable business success stories are just as magnificent. Again, all three of these companies are Alabama born and raised fairytale ventures.

Alfa is Alabama's largest property and casualty insurance company. Today, Alfa employs more than 2300 people and has almost 450 agents in Alabama. It has 229 offices in Alabama, with an office in every county.

Alfa and its affiliates provide insurance in 11 states and has more than a million policies in force. Alfa is also Alabama's leading provider of life insurance with $27 billion of life insurance on the books.

Alfa was formed out of necessity less than 70 years ago. The Alabama Federation Farmer's was established in 1921 to help farmers garner political power. During 1920's, 30's and 40's which spanned the Great Depression and economic catastrophe, Alabama farmers found it impossible to get fire insurance to cover their homes and barns. In 1946, the Farmer's Federation formed a fire insurance company. Farmers put up $11,225 to start their own company. The rest is history.

Liberty National Life

Insurance Company was founded in 1900 in Birmingham. During the next 60 years, it became the greatest business success story in Alabama insurance lore. As late as the 1960's, Liberty National had more life insurance policies Alabamians than every other company in the world combined. It became one of Birmingham's biggest businesses. It had a dominating presence on 20th Street with a gigantic bronze replica of the statue of liberty on top of their distinguished building. The company had so many Alabamians insured for their burials, they figured they might as well own the funeral homes too. So in 1944 the company formed Brown Service and established ownership in most of the funeral homes in the state. In the 1970's Liberty National acquired Globe Life and created Torchmark Corporation as a holding company.

Liberty National was founded by Frank P. Samford. Mr. Samford was born in Troy in 1893. He was the son of a judge and a grandson of Governor William J. Samford. He graduated from Auburn in Frank Samford became very wealthy as the President of Liberty National for over 30 years, especially from his stock ownership in the company. A good many of his associates and business partners also gained tremendous wealth throughout the phenomenal grown of their Liberty National stock. Mr. Samford gave so much of his wealth to Howard College in Birmingham that school he endowed moved to the beautiful campus in suburban Homewood. The school Samford University is named in his honor and rightfully so. He and Liberty National stock paid for the gorgeous elite private college in Homewood.

Alabama business story has been EBSCO. The company is named after its founder, Elton B. Stephens. Thus, EBSCO is an acronym for the founder Elton B. Stephens.

Elton Stephens was born and raised in the small Barbour County hamlet of Clio. Remarkably he and George Wallace were raised in Clio during the same era. So arguably it could be said that one of the greatest businessmen in Alabama history and the state's greatest politician grew up in the same small southeast Alabama village at the same time.

Both Stephens Wallace sold magazines door to door in the summer to help work their way through college. The idea resonated with Stephens. He started a business selling magazine subscriptions to military magnificent bases. Elton Stephens started this business with his wife Alys Robinson Stephens in 1944. Now, 70 years later, EBSCO is a global company with nearly 6000 employees 50 different and companies operating in 23 countries. It has a tremendous diversity of business interests, which include information services, publishing and digital media, outdoor products, real estate and manufacturing.

> EBSCO is one of the state's largest private companies. When Elton Stephens dies in 2005 at age 93, he was one of the wealthiest men in America. He was listed as the 66th wealthiest person in the country with an estimated net worth of $4 billion.

> However, he is best known for his magnificent philanthropy later years. Some of his gifts included the Alvs Robinson Stephens Performing Arts Center at UAB, as well as the Elton B. Stephens Science Center at Birmingham-Southern. He gave $15 million to revive the Alabama Symphony Orchestra. The Stephens family is also responsible developing for futuristic eco-friendly pristine developments of Mt. Laurel in Shelby County and Alvs Beach on Florida's Gulf Coast.

Guest opinion: Library supporters got the wrong end of the deal

by Pat Feemster

For The Tribune

For the first eight years of its existence, the City of Clay had no public library. In its ninth year, that changed due to a vision shared by some Clay citizens. Initially, this vision was a struggle and at times seemed as though it would not happen. Clay has a public library today only because of citizen determination and dedication.

Though there were many library supporters, there are a few who played significant roles in attaining that goal and have remained steadfast in their service. The purpose of this letter is to acknowledge those citizens and their roles in the establishment and operation of the Clay Public Library.

At one of the lowest points of the library mission, Sheryl Spivey, a Clay citizen who was a Clay-Chalkville Middle School teacher at the time, learned about the situation and spoke out forcefully at a council meeting about the importance of a library. A library committee was ultimately approved by the Clay mayor and council with Sheryl Spivey and Jackie Hambrick, also a Clay citizen, serving along with others.

Jackie was later elected to the Clay city council. She requested that her city responsibilities include serving as library liaison. Turning a vision into a reality requires that someone take the lead. That someone was Jackie Hambrick. She devoted extensive time and energy to research authentic restoration and funding options for the 1905 Queen Anne farm house; to work through the process of establishing a library; to seek experienced and talented library staff and, finally, to organize the opening of the library. Much of that time consisted of her personal vacation days. In less than a year from the time she took office in November 2008, the Clay Library opened its doors to the public on October 1, 2009. That was a huge feat, accomplished with help of others, of course, but all under Jackie's direction and with her carrying

In spite of the fact that library boards require significant time, especially for newly established libraries, two of the original library board members, Sheryl Spivey and Clay businessman Ron Self have served since it was formed.

The first board priority was recruiting and hiring library staff and they set the standards high. In 2010, Karen Moody, with over 20 years of experience in public library administration, circulation and youth services, was employed as library director. In 2010, Joy Lee, with a master's degree in Library and Information Studies from the University of Alabama and 11-year tenure with the Trussville Public Library, was hired as assistant library director. Under their capable management, along with a dedicated board, the library thrived and quickly gained recognition for its rapid growth in services and patrons.

In 2012, Jackie was rewarded by the Jefferson County Public Library Association for her tireless work when presented with the Library Champion Award. At the time, Library Director Karen Moody stated, "The importance of her contribution is simple. Clay Public Library would not be what it is today without Jackie's countless hours of volunteer labor. We have seen circulation and patron visits increase nearly every month since we've opened. Thousands of people are now enjoying their own library and taking advantage of all we have to offer because of Jackie's hard work."

For almost six years, the Clay Public Library served the community well, receiving well deserved praise from the Jefferson County Library Cooperative, the Alabama Public Library Service, other libraries and citizens.

Unfortunately, within past year, both the director and assistant director resigned and the library board was "dismantled and reformed" by Mayor Charles Webster and the city council upon the recommendation of City Manager Ronnie Dixon. Two members were reappointed and three members were replaced -Sheryl Spivey, recently appointed Jackie Hambrick and Ron Self - the same three individuals that had served so selflessly.

Public accusations demeaning comments by Clay city officials prior to that action regarding operation of the Clay generated negative publicity that has tarnished the library's good reputation in the minds of many citizens. Such comments continue to be made at council meetings, even by library liaison, Councilman Kevin Small. If there were, indeed, valid issues with the library, would it have not been better for Councilman Small to attempt to work through the issues with the staff and board?

There are proper, professional ways in which to handle personnel and board issues when warranted. For the record, however, the city's assessment of the library is in stark contrast to that of local and state library leadership, whose library credentials and comprehensive knowledge of Clay Library operations far outweigh city officials' assessment ability and call into question the credibility of their accusations.

All of this has been hurtful to the previous director, assistant director and dismissed board members. To each of you, I say, "Thank you for your outstanding service to the City of Clay. The establishment and successful operation of a public library cannot be accomplished without dedicated and determined volunteers and a well qualified staff. Because of your contributions, that goal was achieved."

Center Point set to begin use of red light cameras again

by Chris Yow

Editor

Center Point's controversial red light cameras may be coming back sooner, rather than later, thanks to the creation of a new Public Safety Department by the city, according to Mayor Tom Henderson

city council hired former Fairfield police officer Antonio Weatherly as a fulltime public safety director to head a department. Henderson said the city is still awaiting an Originating Identification Agency Number, required by all law enforcement agencies.

"That number has been applied for, and as soon as that comes through, we'll let people know in plenty of time when we start using them," Henderson said.

Weatherly will take over the patrolling of traffic camera footage, and will determine disbursed traffic citations, according to Henderson. Weatherly will also be able to make arrests, enforce city codes and ordinances, but this will not be a city police forcer. The city will still contract Jefferson County deputies for patrol.

When the traffic cameras were installed, Jefferson County deputies siphoning through photographs taken by the cameras and sending traffic tickets to drivers. After a lawsuit surfaced, Sheriff Mike Hale then ordered deputies to strictly patrol the area. The lawsuit was eventually dismissed.

State Sen.

Coleman, D-Birmingham, sponsored legislation to allow the traffic cameras to be used with several appeals revisions. Former state representative Arthur Payne, R-Trussville, previously sponsored and passed a bill stating the city could use the cameras, despite the lack of a full appeal process.

When the cameras were Linda in use prior to the lawsuit, the city was seeing between $80,000 and $100,000 monthly in revenue. That money, however, could only be used for public safety.

Center Point contracted with Arizona-based Redflex Traffic Systems Inc. to install and operate traffic cameras, as well as handle billing.
